PHOTOGRAPHY

Our photography is a visual representation of all that is possible when training and pairing Service Dogs with Veterans. They should be warm, intimate portraits that tell the emotional story behind all we do at K9s For Warriors.

The moments we capture should feel real, vibrant, and spontaneous. Warrior+Dog and Trainer+Dog photography should capture the bond between them while showing the dog's expression.

Capture real life – ensure images are natural, inspiring and spontaneous, not contrived or staged. Our images should tell a story. Control tone – use tone to focus audience attention to the key feature(s). Minimalism, along with warm and neutral tones, are important to portray our welcoming nature.

Avoid clutter – ensure that there is one clear focal point and don't complicate the image with unnecessary detail. True color – never over saturate an image, reproduce color photography to feel as natural as the real life it represents

PLEASE DO NOT PET

What is a Service Dog?

A Service Dog is a type of assistance dog trained to help people with disabilities. With special training, these dogs help mitigate many different types of disabilities.

Why you should NOT pet a Service Dog:

Service Dogs are always working to help their handler with a disability. By petting or otherwise distracting a Service Dog, you are taking the dog's focus away from the handler. This can cause serious injury to the handler if their dog is not focused on the task at hand.

How Service Dogs can help Veterans with PTSD

K9s For Warriors is the nation's largest provider of trained service dogs for Veterans with PTSD, traumatic brain injury or military sexual trauma, and hopes to reduce the number of Veterans who commit suicide. Service dogs have allowed many Veterans a chance to reunite with their families, head back to school, find renewed enjoyment in life, and significantly reduce their medications.

For U.S. Marine Corps Veteran Quinton, his service dog Moly has given him the gift of living.

When Quinton returned home from combat, he found daily life nearly impossible. His PTSD left him feeling anxious and unsafe when doing everyday activities—tasks we don't think twice about, like going to the mall or a grocery store. Desperate for a way to get back to the life he knew before service, Quinton learned about an alternative treatment method: a service dog specially trained to mitigate his symptoms.

Many Veterans who apply to K9s For Warriors have experienced hypervigilance and isolation due to their conditions. They've tried everything—pills, therapy, you name it — to combat their PTSD, and after many failed attempts, they turn to K9s For Warriors as a last resort. Quinton wasn't sure how a dog could help, but he felt he had nothing to lose. He joined nearly 1,000 other Veterans across the country who have reached out to K9s For Warriors and applied for a service dog.

Backed by scientific research, K9s For Warriors' program empowers Veterans who fought for our freedom to live a life of dignity and independence a new life with a constant companion who offers no judgement, just unconditional love at the end of a leash. With a majority of the dogs being rescues, K9s For Warriors gives a second chance at life not just to Veterans, but dogs, too.

K9s For Warriors rescued Quinton's service dog Molyafter she was seized during an animal cruelty investigation. Moly was in bad shape, scared and distrustful of people, but the procurement team at K9s For Warriors saw her potential. Despite her condition and past trauma, Molybegan the road to becoming a service dog, regaining her strength and trust in humans.

All of Moly's worries melted away the moment she laid eyes on Quinton. With a K9s For Warriors trainer by her side, the gate to the play yard opened, and Moly immediately took off running into Quinton's arms. Smiles stretched wide from ear to ear and they both seemed to breathe a sigh of relief. Neither knew it yet, but this moment was only the beginning: Their bond has been unwavering since that day, and for the first time Quinton is excited for the future, and he believes Moly is, too. He says Moly has given him his life back. He can once again go out in crowded places without being anxious or nervous.

"There's no greater gift than the gift of living," said Quinton.
